

THE WARE

Northern Edition – Issue 2

ALL ABOARD!

Hope is alive in the North!

The North has always been a place of mystery. A place where brave Soldiers and Techs went without knowing if they would ever return.

Now, it has brought light to a hidden

World and given them hope in a new tomorrow.

Commander Chain of the Southern Colonies Patrol forces was on site to receive hundreds of Northern Civilians freed from tyranny by the Resistance.

Victims of marauder attacks and endless hordes they told a story that that is very dark. One that was only undone through our efforts, giving these people the courage to start a new life. Some have even decided to pledge themselves to the cause of the Resistance, becoming Recruits themselves. One young lady, calling herself Jemimah, told us that without the Resistance she would have lost her own life as well as her families. In return she has joined the Southern forces and one day hopes to return North.

We have to wonder, today the trains are all coming south to the colonies but will this change? Are northern colonies just around the corner?

We anxiously await more from the Mysterious North.

FROM THE MYST

Strange reports are coming from those insane enough to venture into the myst.

There have been more sightings of the Resistance Guardian with rumours of her leading an attack against a Blood Witch of Shadow. Another sighting says that she purified a group of Scouts that had become corrupted by drinking from a questionable water source.

Further reports talk about alarming Wraith activity. Some attribute this activity to the issues of Blood Power in the North while others suggest it has to do with the blood moon that is due in the months to come.

All of these reports all come back to one thing and that's blood power.

Officials are reminding people to know the signs and shoot to kill.

"At first we thought it was a cloud but then it looked at us!
We ran, we ran so fast."
Locals are offering confused reports about the rumoured 'Sky Beast'. Some are even saying that it is a sign of the old ways and an omen of luck.

NEW RECRUITS

Sources are telling us that people are flocking to the Resistance in the North. One recruit was heard saying

"We never thought that we could feel safe...that we might be able to be a part of something other than eating, sleeping and killing our own dead."

The Resistance Headquarters in Nygrah is processing dozens of Recruits a day and the Inquisitor had lots to say

"Who said you could be in here. Get out of my office."

It is safe to say that they will be tied up for some time meeting 'protocol'. We wish them all the best and offer thanks to the Specialists and Recruits of the Northern Territories. You are an inspiration.

ABOUT FEAR

Fear is motivation, survival and demise all wrapped up in a complicated psychological package. First we have to understand why we fear, what we fear, and what fear does physically.

The panic at the highest moment of terror was built as a survival mechanism in most creatures on this planet. We have evolved to tone it down so that we behave in a society together. When those bonds of community are broken for long periods of time, luckily we still revert back to 'fight or flight'. I'm sure you've heard this term used quite often, with flight meaning 'run away quickly' and fight generally meaning 'to stand ones ground aggressively'.

What types of situations do you personally have one of those reactions to? Have you committed to Cognitive Behaviour Therapy or other such treatments to get over elevators, spiders or heights? It takes some training to bottle these 'racing thoughts' and collect yourself in a moment's notice.

Finally, what are the physical effects of fear? They can manifest in our intellect in very different ways from startling, jumping, rubbing hands together, increased heart rate, instant perspiration, and sometimes even fainting. You can see how having a self-conscious control over the stages of panic could be beneficial in an apocalypse of any kind.

How does this emotion become motivation? Some people who have learned to master their fears have propelled themselves to the top of their game. The tight rope walkers between buildings or waterfalls can calm themselves, their reaction time and continue along a dangerous path seemingly with ease. Most likely they started at a young age and rewrote their brain patterns and quirks to not find this situation as horrific as some of us might. They have a head start on some of us who will need to use months or years to get that slowed-to-the-second reaction time often featured by our heroes in film. Still beyond that there are problems or nemeses which arise that can bring our favorite character to their knees in terror and sometimes send even James Bond speeding in the opposite direction.

The reason fear is so prevalent in nature and humanity is that it protected us when we didn't have guns, cars, hospitals, readily available food or even control over fire. We exist and survive today because of the fears, terrors, nightmares and panic attacks of our ancestors. Even the instinct of what we should not eat due to the reaction of others (i.e. poison) and remembering what happened to the others around us builds a mental library of threats, dangers and possibly deadly situations. For example when someone in front of you gets accosted by a very drunk and shabby looking man, will you walk in the exact same path and not expect the same result? Or do you cross the street, change your position on the sidewalk to avoid the 'perceived threat'?

Running is an all too easy answer to any confrontation and honestly it can be a big mistake. Have you ever seen someone turn in panic and run into a wall on America's Funniest Home Videos? Or how about seeing someone so worried about what they are about to do that they mess it up in the process? Even that squirrel that dashes out onto the highway to cross, gets three quarters of the way, then suddenly turns and runs back to his starting point?

NEWS OF THE WORLD

WARNING!

These types of mid-panic decisions can lead to injury or even to demise. The first step to controlling fear is to know fear and to expose yourself to the threat and get accustomed to it without learning to fully trust it. People who've faced these spiders or heights head on can often have a better reaction time and ultimately a better outcome.
